QUESTIONS TO BE CONSIDERED.

Some of the Important Measures That Will Come Before the Common Council To-Night.

There will be a number of important measures before the Common Council tonight. At the last meeting the question of holding a special election to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Alderman Clark was referred to the judiciary committee and city attorney, with instructions to report to-night. Those who favor calling an election hold that Mr. Clark's unexpired term extends, by reason of his re-election in October, to Dec. 31, 1891, but those opposed claim that, according to the law creating the Board of Aldermen, the term expires the last day of next month, and that Mr. Clark's re-election has nothing to do with it. The committee will probably report to-night in favor of the latter construction of the law. Councilman Trusler's ordinance for redistricting the city by wards and aldermanic districts will also be considered, on the report of the special committee to which it was referred at the last meeting. The framer of the ordinance and Councilman Thalman, the majority of the committee, will report favorably, but Councilman Hicklin will send in a minority report.

There was some talk last week about another attempt being made to suspend the rules and pass the ordinance by which it is proposed to extend the Citizens' Street-railroad Company's franchise to 1940. But the in-

Company's franchise to 1940. But the indications are that this will not be done. There is a strong sentiment among councilmen and citizens that the present Council should refuse to take any action upon the proposed ordinance whatever. The viaduct matter will also come up for consideration to-night, as will the proposition to pave Washington street, between Noble and Alabama streets, with asphalt.

THE DEMOCRATIC SCHEMERS

Aspirants for Party Honors Protesting Against the Cry for the Old Ticket.

What the Friends of Matson, Bynum, Myers, and English Propose for the Future-Governor Gray's Bad Break.

The announcement that the Democratic State central committee will hold a meeting this week has developed considerable political speculation, and the probabilities are that a number of aspirants for positions on the State ticket will be present in order to get their fences in repair. There is a strong sentiment among the Democrats in favor of the old ticket, from Governor down, but many of the defeated candidates in the last State convention propose to be heard upon the subject before another nomination is made. They claim that Byrne, Munson and others, who have been twice nominated and defeated, are entitled to no further consideration from the party, and that a third nomination is equivalent to saying, in so many words, that when a man is once the party's candidate, he must always be the candidate till he is successful. Said a Democrat of State reputation, when speaking of this subject: "The theory that the old ticket must be nominated again this year is of a piece with the stupidity that the party has shown in the past two campaigns. Munson flew the track last year because be believed the party would be defeated on a platform of free trade, and when he declined at first to be a candidate he stated this, in just so many words. His friends became alarmed at such an utterance from a man who had been upon the State ticket the campaign before, and prevailed upon him to stand for a second nomination and thus give a denial to his utterances. Munson had misgivings during the entire campaign, and he never came near the committee-rooms without throwing everybody into an ague. In Munson had misgivings during the entire campaign, and he never came near the committee-rooms without throwing everybody into an ague. In fact, his influence, or rather the influence of his prediction when he declined to be a candidate, was felt throughout the campaign, and the managers wished time and again that he was off the ticket. Munson is a protectionist at heart, though a stanch Democrat, and it would be madness to give him another nomination, just because he has been twice defeated. If nominated next spring and defeated again next fall, I suppose the party would have to try the old ticket again two years hence, and so on, indefinitely. Such a doctrine would kill any party in the world."

Ex-Congressman Matson is training for the gubernatorial nomination again, and the friends of Captain Myers are already arranging a scheme by which their favorite is to be a gainer from the gubernatorial fight. Myers wants to be Governor, but it is conceded that he lacks the ability to organize his friends effectively in a State canvass, and for this reason they have given up all hope of seeing him nominated for Governor. As one of them expressed it: "Myers is too small to spread all over the State, and for that reason his friends are advising him to get rid of the gubernatorial bee as soon as possible." These friends. however, have determined to bring Bynum into the fight for the governorship, and, when he is nominated, to push Myers for his successor in Congress.

Bynum is to be sent to different parts of the State to make speeches next summer, and at 'his time Myers's friends are to begin the boom that is to make Bynum the candidate for Governor two years hence. His alleged popularity with the laboring classes will be magnified, and such a sentiment will be created in the State that Myers's friends believe it will be irresistible. With Bynum out of the way, Myers will then enter the race for Congress. While this scheme has been mapped out, and appears very plausible upon its face, Matson's supporters have been fully a assembled to select some other candidate, and Myers's name was mentioned, it was received with hisses. A dozen or more said they would rather vote for Bynum than Myers, and his name was immediately withdrawn. Bynum out of the way, the strongest man before the Democrats of the district would be young Will English. He would be a much stronger man with the party than Myers, and there is no doubt but he would like to serve another term in Congress."

Governor Gray's speech before the Gray Club, last week, has caused some lively comments from members of his party, and there is a feeling that he made a great mistake in some of his utterances for a man who aspires to succeed the "Tall Sycamore of the Wabash" in the United States Senate. In the course of his remarks he said that the results of the last campaign were a moral victory for the Democrats, and that he believed that the coming Congress would proceed at once, after convening to make a substantial reduction in the tariff. Continuing, he declared that the Democrats in Congress ought to set themselves in direct opposition to such a course. "For," said he, "the meat is ours, and the Republicans should not be allowed to take it away from us. If I were in Congress I would oppose every bill to reduce the tariff until the Democrats are in full control of that body." The sentiment was not applauded by his hearers, and several have remarked that it was the most foolish sentiment they ever knew to come from a man who desired to be considered the leader of the party in the State. Said a well-known Democrat yesterday: "The Governor seems to think that it would be a defeat of the Democrats for it would be a defeat of the Democrats for the Republicans in Congress to indorse the principle of tariff reform and pass a law which would reduce the tariff, but he will not find one in a hundred to agree with him on the proposition. If he were to convince a Republican by argument that Democratic principles are right, and the fellow should appear at the polls with a Democratic ballot, would he say to him, 'Hold on, sir; you can't vote that ticket now, you must wait till our party is in power; we don't want any Republicans to indorse our principles till we are in control of the country?' Would this be good politics or good sense? It seems to me that the Governor was sadly off when he made such a remark. Suppose the party had said that to him when he came over for office in 1872. Wouldn't he have thought it a long time till 1884? For that was the first time that the party came into power after he became the party came into power after he became a member of it."

The Week's Amusements.

The local theaters will present strong attractions this week. At the Grand Operahouse Miss Julia Marlowe will appear in a repertoire of standard plays, and her engagement will be one of the notable events of the dramatic season. To-night Miss Marlowe will be seen as Parthenia in "Ingomar," a character in which she has won much favorable comment. To-morrow evening, "As You Like It" will be presented, the star appearing as Rosalind, and the engagement will close Wednesday night with an elaborate production of "Twelfth Night," Miss Marlowe assuming the role of Viola. The supporting company is a strong one as a whole, Milnes Levick, Mary Shaw, W. H. Crompton, Ian Robertson and others

"A Paper Doll," Kate Castleton's bright and entertaining musical comedy, will be presented at English's during the first half of the week, Miss Castleton appearing in the leading part. The play has been seen here before, and has always been a popular attraction. It is a sketch made no catchy musical selections, good dancing and entertaining specialties. Miss Castle-ton is a leader in her line of business, and is a popular young comedienne. Sol Smith Russell will follow Julia Marlowe, at the Grand, appearing in his eccentric character of Noah Vale in "A Poor Relation." The play is probably the best he has ever given to the public.

Rentfrow's Jolly Path-finders will occupy the Park all week, presenting a new play this is the every day. The engagement will open, this afternoon, with a "A Pair of Owls," which will be repeated at night. The company has an excellent reputation. At the William Ludwig concert, on next Friday evening, at English's Opera-house, the programme will be extensive and varied. Irish music, however, will predominate, and as a singer of ballads Mr. Ludwig, it is said, is equally successful as in wig, it is said, is equally successful as in oratorio or opera.

Mr. Richard Schliewen, who is to succeed Mr. Balck in the School of Music, will appear in a concert at Ilymouth Church, Friday evening. Miss Wagner, the pianist, and Mrs. Enrique Miller, the soprano, will also take part. The programme will include the following: Rhapsody. G minor, Brahms; Fantasia, caprice, Vieuxtemps; "The Worker," Gounod; Nocturne, C minor, Chopin; "Le Trilles du Diable," Tartini; Spanish Dance, Sarasate; "Where the Bee Sucks," Sulliyan; waltz, F major, Rubenstein, "Meditation," with piano and organ, Bach-Gounod.

WORKING FOR TEMPERANCE.

Knights of Father Mathew and Blue-Ribbon Workers Join Hands in the Cause.

At Masonic Hall, last evening, a meeting was held, the first of a series which give promise to result in great good. The meeting was called under the auspices of the Knights of Father Mathew, of the Father Bessonies Commandery, but there was a good attendance of Murphy temperance workers, who were present by invitation. Seated upon the stage were Father Bessonies, Father Cooney, Dr. W. B. Fletcher, Charles E. Reynolds, Joseph Taggart, and others. The meeting was called to order by P. J. Kelleher. "We Catholics," said Mr. Kelleher, "are, of course, all delighted with the great congress that has recently been held at Baltimore, and the broad and liberal views they have put forth. Our church stands fairer before the world than before, because of the views there given, and because it is better known. I am glad of the temperance clause in the platform, and that there can be no misunderstanding as to the attitude of the church as to total abstinence."

After the song, "God Is Coming." sung by Messrs. Ryan and Leiter, Dr. William B. Fletcher came forward. The Doctor said he was glad to see the Knights of Father Mathew and the Blue-ribbon Club shake hands, so to speak, in the same good cause—a sentiment that met with a hearty round of applause. "I have been truly delighted," said the Doctor, "at this recent action of the laity and clergy of the Roman Catholic Church. The great church, as it seems to me, has taken a blanket mortgage on the world and invited everybody to come in, for the purpose of getting rid of the great enemy of mankind. I am interested more in Father Mathew than many of you may think. I remember, in 1851, when he was in this country, my father, coming home from the East, brought home with him a Father Mathew medal, and I remember there were organizations in his After the song, "God Is Coming," sung on the world and invited everybody to come in, for the purpose of getting rid of the great enemy of mankind. I am interested more in Father Mathew than many of you may think. I remember, in 1851, when he was in this country, tny father, coming home from the East, brought home with him a Father Mathew medal, and I remember there were organizations in his name in Indiana. In 1857 it was my pleasure to enter Ireland by the beautiful cove of Cork, the most beautiful harbor in the world; superior in my eyes even to the Bay of Naples. In the city of Cork I inquired for the house in which Father Mathew had lived so long. I asked a brawny-armed young woman, who was washing clothes. She could now fell me, and as I left she continued her song:

"Munchler she married a Quaker, My uncle's a big brogan-maker in the beautiful harbor of Cork.

"I eventually found the house where Father Mathew had lived, and my object in finding it was to find the house that had been my wife's birthplace, and which was next door to it. She had sat many a time upon Father Mathew's knee. I became well acquainted with the temperance movement in Ireland, the greatest the world will ever know. I hope in Indiana will be begun a movement that will extend all over the United States. From 1848 until Father Mathews's death, in 1858, more than two and a half millions had taken his pledge." The Dector them proceeded to show the effects of drink from a medical stand-point, and the degradation, moral and physical, that is brought upon a man. He showed the brain deterioration in the drinker, the loss of will power, all brought about by alcoholic poisson. I am titule the consumer of the greatest the world has ever known, but not, I trust, the greatest the world may be a state of the greatest the world will ever know. I hope in Indiana will be begun a movement that will extend all over the United States. From 1848 until Father Mathews's death, in 1858, more than two and a half millions had taken his pledge." The Dector them proceeded to show the effects of dri

Father Cooney, the well-known priest, who was chaplain of the Thirty-fifth Indiwho was chaplain of the Thirty-fifth Indiana (Irish) Regiment during the war, came forward and was received with applause.
"There are," said the Father, "at least 200,-000 saloons in the United States, and it would be a low estimate to place to the credit of each saloon four drunkards. Therefore, there would be 800,000 drunkards in the United States. It is calculated that 100,000 of these go yearly into a drunkard's grave. Think of the terrible wrong that liquor brings, not only to the body, but to the soul. One half of the suicides are drunkards, one-half the divorces are caused by drunkenness, and one-half the murders. Think of the enormous cost of liquor to society and to the state. The creature destroyed by liquor is man, made in the image of God. God is eternal, man is immortal. It is through liquor that the soul of man is destroyed. He becomes neither man nor stroyed. He becomes neither man nor brute, but a devil, and transformed so that he is capable of committing any crime."

The Father gave a number of illustrations of the benefit of total abstinence work. Speaking of the danger of touching drink at all, in any way, he said: "A council of rats was once called to devise a method to get a choice piece of meat out of a steel-trap which was set in a cellar. It had been resolved that the way to get the meat was to put one foot on the trap and a steel-trap which was set in a cellar. It had been resolved that the way to get the meat was to put one foot on the trap and with another to quickly take out the bait, but when an old, ragged, three-legged rat limped into the assembly, 'Stop. stop,' he cried, 'P've tried the plan you recommend, and here, holding up his maimed leg, is the result. My advice is to keep away from the trap altogether.' And my advice, said Father Cooney, in conclusion, "is to keep away from the saloon altogether if you would not be an old, ragged, miserable rat."

Father Bessonies then came forward, and an invitation was extended to all who wished to take the pledge. Two young men came forward. "Since last Christmas," said Father Bessonies, "I have given the pledge to 199 persons and you will make 201." As the young men were about to raise their hands to take the pledge a commotion was noticed in the audience, and soon, before the astonished gaze of the good old priest, the line lengthened, until forty persons, among whom were a few ladies, were ranged before him. They then took the pledge,"I promise, with God's assistance, to abstain from all intoxicating liquor as long as I live. God bless you." Several of those who took the pledge already wear the blue ribbon, and Father Bessonies could not but feel pleased at the compliment paid him.

These meetings, under, the auspices of the Knights of Father Mathew, will be held every Sunday evening at Masonic Hall through the winter.

The Murphy gospel temperance meeting at Masonic Hall, yesterday afternoon, led by Mr. Portious, was fairly attended, notwithstanding the weather. The chief address was by Rev. Dr. Van Anda, of Roberts Park M. E. Church. He declared himself in favor of the absolute overthrow and blotting out from under the heavens of the liquor business as a crime against God and man. Mr. Pike, of Terre Haute, and Mr.

Mr. Pike, of Terre Haute, and Mr. Bogan made short speeches, and Joseph Taggart made a pleasant allusion to the recent action of the Catholic congress at Baltimore on the temperance question, and that Catholics and non-Catholics could now join in their work against the common Arriving at their destina-tion, they agreed to separate in search of game. The morning was cold, and a drizzling rain had set in. Game was scarce, and within an hour Burch and Cenquelin met and decided to return. They called Huffman in vain, and for hours wandered around the lake for their missing companion. They were unsuccessful in their search until one of them saw, beneath an outreaching log, the body of their friend half buried in the treacherous mire that surrounded the edge of the lake.

They dragged the body to firm ground and tried in vain to bring back life to the stiffened limbs. Huffman was yet alive, but after one or two gasus for breath he ex-

It was 6 o'clock last night when Burch and Cenquelin returned to this city with their melancholy burden. The deceased lived at Miller's Hotel, on South street, where they took the body, which was afterward removed to Ehrman's undertaking establishment, to await investigation into the cause of death. Cenquelin, who discovered the body, says that, from the surroundings, he thinks that Huffman had stepped on the log for some purpose and had slipped into the mud, which drew him in like quicksand.
